Market update

We look forward to 2021 being a year of recovery – both in a physical and economic sense. January saw the continued rollout across North America, Europe and Asia of three major vaccines, the second impeachment of former President Donald Trump, the inauguration of President Joe Biden and the rise of the Reddit community.

COVID-19 Outlook

As many expected would happen, January saw a rise in COVID-19 case numbers around the world as many gathered for the western holiday season. While much of the northern hemisphere remains in some form of lockdown, the spread of the virus continues. As we spoke about last month, the vaccine roll out in the US had been slower than previously planned.

However, since the inauguration of President Joe Biden, the daily inoculation rate was more than 1 million per day on a 7 day rolling basis by the end of January, and daily cases had fallen significantly off the early highs of over 250,000 to 150,000 confirmed per day.

As for the UK, the highly contagious variant that was discovered in early December continues to spread around the country. Similar to the US, there are signs that the vaccination program combined with lockdowns have made a positive impact as daily case numbers have reduced towards the end of the month. In addition, for the first time the UK government has looked to introduce some form of hotel quarantine, a model we are familiar with in Australia, as well as shutting their borders to certain countries.

Reddit

The final week of January was dominated by a ‘short squeeze’ in the US market instigated by members of a social media discussion group Wallstreetbets, part of the greater Reddit site.

The group of retail investors attempted to take on the Wall Street hedge funds by targeting stocks that these funds had large amounts of shorts in, particular one videogames retailer GameStop.

The action drove triple-digit price gains in the shorted companies. But the large gains prompted hedge funds to take profit (sell or close their long positions) on other stocks to cover potential losses. US online trading platform Robin Hood was a key player for these traders with hundreds of thousands of accounts being opened by retail traders.

To avoid a liquidity event, Robin Hood pre-emptively restricted the level of trading in particular securities and while not the only cause, this led to a fall in the price of Gamestop as many margin traders were stopped out. In the coming days, the stock has fallen from its all-time highs but still remains well above its pre January 25 levels.

Australia

January is historically a quieter month for economic data and company announcements in Australia. As such the RBA does not hold its regular first Tuesday of the month meeting. Of the available data, we saw headline CPI rise by 0.9% (trimmed 0.4%) in the December quarter.

The result was impacted by a range of state and federal government policies rolling off in Q3 and Q4 in particular childcare, excises, housing and electricity. With an annual trimmed mean rate of just 1.2%, inflation remains subdued and below the RBA 2-3% target band.

The difficult economic conditions that we have spoken about in previous months have contributed to the below target inflation outcome.

The unemployment rate fell to 6.6% in December from 6.8% in November and below market consensus of 6.7%. This was the lowest jobless rate since April 2020. Both the full-time and parttime unemployment rates fell, and the participation rate increased to a 16 month high of 66.2%.

In addition to this, the underemployment rate fell by 0.8% to 8.5%, and the underutilization rate dropped 1.1% to 15.1%.

Despite some short-term lockdowns in major east coast capital cities over the Christmas break, these are key indicators that show individuals that have been unable to work due to physical lockdowns are getting back out there and finding jobs. Similarly we have seen those that have been stood down are working more hours. The real test for employment and the broader economy will come in March this year when the final round of JobKeeper and JobSeeker roll off.

Tips for creating the retirement you want, today

Even if you don't plan to retire until you may be eligible for the Age Pension – there are small steps you can take now to secure your future after work. Given your retirement could make up a large portion of your lifetime – you'll want to enjoy it.

Get on the front foot of your retirement goals, by considering these tips:

1. Do you want to retire by a certain age?

While Australia doesn't have an official retirement age, there are some factors to consider when determining what age you might stop work. You might retire when you're eligible for the Age Pension, or when you reach your Preservation Age – the age when you can access your super.

Your retirement age might also be influenced by your profession, health, family circumstances, or individual preference. The main point to remember is, the earlier you retire, the longer you'll be relying on your super and savings, and the more you'll need to have saved to support you.

2. Add a little bit more into your super now

You could consider asking your employer about setting up a salary sacrifice arrangement for your super. You could find, depending on your salary, you may save on tax. Super is a long-term relationship – the more attention you give it, the greater the potential. Even salary sacrificing a small amount now – like the cost of one takeaway lunch a week – can make a difference to your super balance over the longer term.

3. Review your investments approach

Looking at how your super is invested could make a big difference to your retirement savings goals. If you still have many years left in the workforce, you may want to look at what your risk appetite is, and consider a higher risk, higher return approach to your investment strategy. A Financial Adviser could help you work out what investment strategy may suit your needs.

4. Protection for the unexpected

If you have insurance in your super, you may want to check if your cover still suits you, and your family's needs.

No matter what your financial position is today, an unexpected event can see it all unravel very quickly. Insurance cover can help so that if there is an unforeseen event, you and your family can hopefully continue to move forward – and it can lessen the impact to your retirement savings.

5. What's on your to-do list in retirement?

It's important to think about how you want to structure your time when you retire, well before you leave full-time work. It's normal to have different views about what constitutes a dream retirement.

Think through your expectations about travel plans, making a sea or tree change and pursuing a hobby or even a new business. It's also wise to consider whether and how you want to financially assist your children or care for elderly relatives. Or you might want to continue working part time, while balancing your other life interests. These factors should be taken into account when planning how you want to fund your retirement, as well as the type of lifestyle you will lead.

6. Look at your debts

Will you be entering retirement debt-free? Repaying as much of your debts as possible before you retire, can make a big difference to your lifestyle and the funds you'll have available in retirement. While building your retirement savings, also consider a plan to proactively clear your debt by using any free cash flow to reduce the amount you owe to strengthen your financial position. You may also want to consider any benefits gained from rolling your debts into one or using another provider that offers lower rates and fees.

How is your credit score affected by COVID-19?

While your credit score shouldn't be affected by repayment deferrals, if you have been impacted by COVID-19, it's still important to find ways to maintain it in future.

If you're one of the many Australians financially impacted by COVID-19, who have deferred $218 billion worth of payments this year – fear not. Your credit score is unlikely to be affected by payment deferrals or mortgage holidays due to the current state of the world.

While that's good news, it's still important to maintain a high credit score by understanding how it's calculated and what you can do to maintain it in future.

So, what is a credit score?

A credit score is a number between zero and 1200 that reflects how much money you have borrowed, the way you use credit and your history paying off any loans and credit cards. This is calculated based on many sources of information including:

- Your personal details like your age, income and living arrangements.
- Financial information like how many loans and credit cards you have.
- Your bill paying history for expenses like energy and phone bills.
- While your credit score is a record of positive information, such as your track record making repayments on time and in full, it also encompasses negative information such as late payments, court adjudications, bankruptcies and insolvencies.

All in all, the higher the score, the better and the more likely lenders will be to approve loan or credit card applications you might make. The lower the score, the riskier you will be perceived by lenders, making them less inclined to approve your application for a loan, which is why having a high credit score is important.

How is it calculated?

Credit bureaus are responsible for consumers' credit scores, which are calculated across the bands below:

Excellent: 841 – 1,200

Very good: 756 – 840

Good: 666 – 755

Average: 506 – 665

Below average: 0 – 505

What is a credit report?

A credit report sits alongside your numeric credit score and contains all the information used to determine that number. The report includes detailed information about the way you handle credit, such as your repayment history, as well as any defaults or overdue payments. It also encompasses information about your active loans and credit cards such as their value and repayment amounts.

Be aware your credit report will include a record of any defaults if you miss a payment valued at $150 or more that's overdue for more than 60 days.

What's it used for?

Banks and other financial institutions check your credit score and your credit report to see how likely you are to be able to make your repayments on new loans or credit cards for which you apply. Banks, telcos and energy companies also check this information every time you apply for credit with them.

What might cause your credit score to drop?

There are a range of reasons your credit score could drop, such as when you pay off a loan or cancel a credit card. While this might be confusing, this is because lenders have less information to assess how reliable you are at paying off debts or assessing loan applications.

Your credit score can also drop when you successfully take out new credit. This is because the average 'age' of your debt drops with the new loan. Over time, when lenders see you making regular payments on your new card or loan, your credit score should increase once more. Your credit score will also drop if you miss a payment, are routinely late making payments, or, if you go bankrupt.

How can I improve my credit score?

There are lots of steps to take to improve your credit score, including:

Pay your bills and loan repayments on time, and, in full. It's an idea to set up direct debits so all of your obligations are automatically paid. This could help minimise the risk of missing a repayment and having this affect your credit score.

Don't apply for too many new lines of credit, for instance multiple credit cards, at the same time. Lenders can take this as a sign you're experiencing a cash flow crisis and need access to money fast, which can put you in the higher-risk category as a borrower.

Lower your credit limit. Lenders like to see borrowers using credit responsibly by paying off their repayments on time, and, in full.

Will my credit score be affected if I have deferred my mortgage repayments?

Banks have allowed borrowers who have been affected by COVID-19 shutdowns to defer loan and mortgage repayments for up to six months. Rest assured your credit score will not be affected if you have deferred your loan repayments.

This means that your credit report will not include a record that you have missed a payment as a result of deferring your repayments due to COVID-19. However, your credit score may be impacted if you have missed a payment on a loan or credit card for other reasons.

What should I do if I think my credit score is wrong?

You can take steps to correct your credit score if you think it's wrong. Contact the credit reporting agencies to amend details such as your name and address. If the error involves incorrect defaults or information on your file that is a result of identify theft, contact your credit provider.
